ADIRONDACK TOWN'S RISE. TUPPER LAKE VILLAGE A COW PAS-TURE TEN YEARS AGO.

Uncle John Hurd Built a Railroad From Nowhere to the Place, Then Put Up a Lumber Mill and the People Came Hurd's Failure and the Town's Fire.

TUPPER LAKE, N. Y., March 24.-Tupper Lake Village is the town that Uncle John Hurd built over night in McLaughlin's cow pasture, and that very shortly grew to such proportions as to admit only one rival in the Adirondacks in point of population and none in point of trade. It has risen since Phornix-like from the ruins of a disastrous fire that swept away the entire business part last summer, and proved by its marvellous recuperative power, though a town of mushroom growth in the beginning, it has a sub-

The pioneer and patriarch of Tupper Lake is old William McLaughlin, who was born at Calais, Me., in 1812, and came into the Adirondacks with a lumber company forty-seven years Previous to McLaughlin a trapper named ie had built a little shanty on the river bank and cleared an acre of ground for a garden patch,

At that time nothing but pine was cut, and spruce was regarded as of little consequence. The logs were driven down the Raquette River to Hewitt ville, three miles from Potsdam, and there sawed into lumber. The river was then in much bette condition for floating the logs than it is to-day, and only thirty-five days were required for the first drive, whereas logs that go by this route at present are from seventy five to a hundred days on the way. Continuous driving has scooped out the banks and widened the stream, and with less water it is a vastly more difficult and tedious matter to get the logs through than it was in the early days of lumbering.

In 1871 the State built the reservoir down below Raquette Pond that backed up the water of the river for miles and killed hundreds of thousands of growing trees, many of which still stretch their gaunt limbs heavenward. Ten years ago there were only half a dozen families living in the neighberhood of Tupper Lake. McLaughlin, Sim and Mart Moody, Sim Ratty, George McBride and Ernest Johnson were the permanent residents. living at intervals of a mile or more from each other. Four years before John Hurd had gone to Moira at the northwest corner of the woods and started a railroad south into the wilderness without any very apparent objective point unless it was nis purpose to bisect the Adirondacks and connect with the existing Delaware and Hudson branch at North Creek at the diametrically opposite corner. First the road was built to St. Regis Edils a distance of twelve miles from Mora. Fails, a distance of twelve miles from Morra Then, after a time it was extended six miles far Then, after a time it was extended six miles far-ther to Santa Clara, then fourteen miles to Bran-don, and finally, by the longest jump of all, to the shores of the Raquette. It was a spasmodic piece of radroad progression, characteristic of the eccentricity of the man who planned it. If John Burd intended to piece out his road at the ends and make it the connecting link in a trunk line from New York to Ottawa he was doomed to dis-appointment, for the road came to a standstill solat as work on its senthern extension is conappointment, for the road came to a standstill solar as work on its southern extension is concerned. Hurd named his terminus, Tupper Lake, although it is, as a matter of fact, two miles from Tupper Lake and on the shores of an entirely distinct sheet of water, known as Raquette Pond, it was his way to anticipate events.

The road ran through unbroken forests and ended nowhere. As there was no traffic that could be counted upon to pay operating expenses litted set to work to create this necessary adjunct. Other men construct railroads to supply

Other men construct railroads to supply eal or prospective demand, but John Hurd was built on the ordinary plan, and reversed the cess. Having finished his road he decided at he must have lumber as the most available that he must have lumber as the most available freight to carry over it, and to supply this he built what was then said to be the largest sawmill in the world. In this enterprise his usual plan of putting the cart before the horse was adhered to. First he built the mill and afterward he began looking around for logs on which to set it working. Here he encountered a snag of more than ordinary projections. On all sides were hundred so f subjective. his winter trapping rubbed his eyes to see a town of 2,000 inhabitants and the busy stir of in-dustry, where before had been the stump-dotted more easily be found in the thickets when milk-ing time came.

ing time came
it was a neterogeneous assemblage of hustling Yankees and voluble French Canadians that wooke mornings in the little, unpainted frame dwellings and felt to their task of converting forest trees into daily bread. Money circulated freely and there was good fortune for every one with the single exception of the man who made the town. He had met and conquered successive barriers, but at last there was one that he could not surmount, and if report is to be credited it not surmount, and if report is to be credited it was the lack of logs to convert into lumber to carry over his railroad. The big mill ran a year. Hurd tried making wire reels and baskets and similar articles, but if there was a profit on these the volume of business was not control of his various enterprises has passed into other hands and he does not share the prosperity. Tupper Lake village at present is said to have a population of 3,000. Two years ago a Raines law census was taken to regulate the license fee and the returns then gave something in excess of 2,500 inhabitants. It has three churches, but the Roman Catholic far out numbers the others in point of attendance, ministering to the spiritual needs of 800 families.

The first which swept the business part of the town started in the pioneer store of King & Page, and was probably of incendary origin. It was at its height at midnight and carried everything before it, fanned by a strong southwesterly wind. There was then no city water and no mains in the streets of the village, and the fire department had trouble with their hose and could do mothing to combat the flames. Persons on the streets of Unca, a hundred miles away, saw the reflection of the fire in the sky. But the residents of the hitle town of Axton, fifteen miles north of Tupper, were unaware of the holocaust till the following morning when they awoke to find the ground strewn with cinders from the burned town.

Many men lost their all in the fire, but the embers had hardly cooled when the work of rebuilding the town began. A water system was in stalled, supplied with high pressure from a mountain lake three miles away, while larger and more substantial business houses were erected, and despite the crushing loss only a few months more substantial business houses were erected, and despite the crushing loss only a few months ago the town at the present time appears to the ago the town at the present time appears to the casual visitor at least to be better and more prosperous than ever before. That there is an abundance of cash in circulation is indicated by the fact that a fair held by the Catholic Church a few weeks ago netted $1,200, and also by the statement that no poor people can be found to receive some money that has long gone begging, for a recipient. Immediatly after the fire Dr. Seward Webbsenta check for $500 to be used in alleviating the destitution, which was expected to result, and Mr. Barbour a member of the thread firm, who has a campon Tupper Lake, added $250. McLaughlin cleared forty or fifty acres of land and started the typical backwoods lumber farm, which is designed primarily for raising hay for the horses employed in drawing logs. The first year McLaughlin was at Tupper Lake hay for the requirements of the lumber company was hauled from Lake Champiain through the centre of the Adirondacks, over frozen lakes and horse and his men come to fit play. INTERSCHOLASTIC SPORT. Trinity School May Have to Resign From ternoon several matters of importance will be decided. The amendment to the constitution relating to the scholarship question will be disposed of and Trinity School will either stay a nember or be forced to resign. From all accounts the latter couse will be the only one for Trinity to pursue, as the amendment is almost sure to pass. The age limit will receive attention at the meeting and a hard try will be made to raise it from 20 to 21 years. The Track Committee will hand in their report and the date for the annual championships will be made known. Preparations are under way by the Barnard School for what will probably be the largest open school game to be held indoors this season. The contests will take place at the Eighth Regiment Armory next Saturday afternoon. In addition to the regular athletic programme a relay race has been added and the crack hard for the various championship games that are soon to be played. The interest in the final outcome of the race for the pennant in New York is bound to be great on account of the schools entered. The students at the school do not get the time to train and it has been decided to withdraw. A feature at the school is fencing and that sport is not indulged in by the association.

In track athleties Columbia Institute will not be much in evidence, because the youngsters are very much occupied with military drills. The baseball team has not as yet been selected. It will not be entered in the interscholastic series, but will play games with the schools of the association now and then. The fall and winter months are devoted to securing the logs which later will be sawed into building material or converted into paper. The trees are felled by axemen, or as is more commonly the case at present, they are sawed down with the big 5-foot cross-cut saws handled by two men, or thereabouts, and dragged to the skidways the logs are hauled on bob-sleds to the railtond, or some suitable driving stream for the final stage of their pourney to the mills.

one case my sympathies were with the victim. "There was a young woman in the camp named Silver Leaf, daughter of the Turtle, a man so indolent that he was very poor. He was fond of telling every one that he would not always be poor. 'Look at that girl,' he was wont to say; 'there isn't as handsome a one in the whole world; when she grows up some one will give me enough for her to make me the wealthiest man in this tribe.

"Silver Leaf developed into as tall, slende and graceful a young woman as any one would wish to see, barring her complexion, which was dark of course, and she was as modest and well behaved as she was handsome. The young men gazed upon her hopelessly; the older ones counted their herds and figured how many head they could possibly give in order to secure her hand. One after another they made their offers of twenty, forty, fifty, and even seventy five horses. Turtle laughed and shook his head. No one in the whole tribe felt that he could spare more, and the girl remained in her father's lodge. "At this time there was a young man in my employ named Bearhead. He was saving and ambitious, and in a little while he collected a nice hand of horses, and had also a number of robes, blankets and guns, besides other things which constitute the wealth of the red men. "Why do you suppose I am working so hard, and saving all I can?" he asked me one day. "Oh, I don't know,' I replied, 'unless it is to get you a nice young wife.

"That's just it,' he said. 'I'm going to marry Silver Leaf one of these days." "I laughed, and told him the sooner be gave up that idea the better it would be for his peace mind; that it was well known Turtle had refused seventy five head of horses for her.

"No one in this tribe can pay more for her," he replied, 'so I have plenty of time in which to make a bigger offer. About a year from now I will have at least a hundred horses. Turtle will not refuse a herd of that size."

ROBBED ON THE HIGHWAY.

The Pockets of Two Long Islanders Searched Near Querns.

On the Rocky Hill road, about a mile from Queens, L. I., yesterday afternoon, William H. Place, a merchant of Little Neck, and Robert Jacobia, the manager of the general store of Councilman D. L. Van Nostrand at Little Neck, were robbed. They had been in a party who started from Little Neck to try their horses on the Queens borough speedway at Jamaica. Ahead of them in carriages were Councilman D. L. Van Nostrand and ex-County Treasurer Joseph Dykes. When Place and Jacobia reached a lonely part of the road none of these men was in sight.

Suddenly three Italians jumped from the roadside. One of them caught the bridle of roadside. One of them caught the bride of Place's horse and brought him to a standstill. The other two men covered Place and Jacobia with revolvers and demanded that they get out of the buggy. The commands of the highwaymen were obeyed. Then, while the two Italians still kept them covered with their revolvers, the third Italian searched their pockets. From Place's pockets were taken $35 in bills, two checks for $5 cach and an opened-faced watch. From Jacobia was taken an open-faced gold watch.

As soon as the Italians got their booty they ran into the woods at the side of the road. Before Place and Jacobia could get into their buggy, G. Howland Leavitt, a director of the Third Avenue road, who was of the same party going to Jamaica, drove up. Mr. Leavitt, after hearing of the robbery, hurried to the Jamaica station and gave the alarm. Place and Jacobia drove to the Flushing station. No arrests have been made.

REAL ESTATE NEWS.

The week just passed has witnessed the de feat of the Stranahan-Allds bill to tax all mort rages, and thus one of the three things that are alleged to have un[avorably influenced the real estate market thus far this year has been emoved. There yet remains the fear of a higher city tax rate, which it is believed will be announced in August, and considerable increase in cost of building materials in the past year. They are likely to be sufficient to restrict operations for some time, and brokers do not look for very much improvement in the market until Easter. The opening of the suburban season is likely to result in brisk sales of property in the outlying districts and so bring some added relief to the market.

The increasing number of large avartment houses and flats is a noticeable feature of the building trade, north of Central Park and also west of it. Very many of these are on the cross streets and are substantial in appearance and comfortably and handsomely fitted up within. The improvement in construction, plans and finishing of recent buildings over those of even a few years ago is a very remarkable thing. and apartments renting for the same price which one would have had to pay a decade ago are immeasureably superior in all those little details so desirable in the home. There is a manifest inclination to invest in this sort o property, for which there is a steady demand and there is no doubt that they are paying investments, especially when built upon cross streets within reasonable distance of a car

The region just north of Central Park is being rapidly built up with this style of building. Former Gov. Levi P. Morton having been a
